To Whom It May Concern:

I am a registered nurse with a Bachelor of Science degree from Cal. State Univ. Long Beach. While obtaining that degree I completed 4 months of concentrated study in critical care nursing. I have specialized in the field of critical care for 7 years. My training has included a thorough internship in critical care at St. Mary Medical Center in Long Beach, Ca. Among other graduate studies I have taken in depth courses for certification as a Critical Care R.N. and in Advanced Cardiac Life Support. I have been a member of the American Association of Critical care Nurses.

Presently I am employed by the Women's Hospital of Long Beach Memorial Medical Center. In the past I have worked in a variety of nursing capacities, including public health. My expertise remains in the critical care area.

As an expert in critical care nursing I have a statement to make about Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh.

My initial exposure to Bhagwan came through reading books of his discourses. I have since visited his meditation center in Laguna Beach several times. I have found his teachings to be extremely valuable on both a personal and professional level. Nursing involves treating the patient spiritually as well as physically, and here Bhagwan serves as a guide. The compassion of this man can only enhance the compassion of a nurse caring for the ill. From Bhagwan, a nurse can learn to be more sensitive to the patient's needs; can be more effective in dealing with the dying patient, their ultimate death, and the grief of the family. This is particularly important in critical care where death is common. The nurse is also better equipped to cope with his or her own work related stress thanks to the presence of Bhagwan. These are just a few examples of Rajneesh's contributions to the healing arts.

It is my feeling nursing in the U.S., and across the world, can benefit from the work of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh.

Sincerely,
