TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

I write as an experienced dental surgeon, having qualified at the University of Witwaterand, Johannesburg, South Africa, in 1967. Since then, I have practised dentistry in Israel and established my own practice in England, following a lecturship in Oral Pathology in South Africa.

I should like to take the opportunity of making a few observations concerning the Indian teacher, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh.

His dissertations on how to treat, holistically rather than palliatively, any medical problem that a person may develop have been of immense importance to our healing professions. As a dentist concerned with diseases of the mouth and teeth, his advice is always relevant.

I also find his techniques of meditation to be valuable in helping me to stay calm and relaxed while pursuing a stressful occupation, working all day with tense and apprehensive patients.

His breadth of vision and insight into humanity are an immensely valuable gift to the world and any country in which he is resident must be consider
