To Whom It May Concern:

I work in London's West End as an audio secretary and word processor operator for an international firm of estate agents.

I was introduced to Bhagwan, three years ago, by my parents who were then living in Poona, India. Initially, what impressed me most was the obvious transformation in my parents. They had previously been members of the Theosophical Society for approximately twenty years, during which time they had studied theosophy and philosophy in a constant search for truth. It was apparent to me that they had found in Bhagwan, someone who really knew the answers.

Since that first introduction, I have attended many of Bhagwan's discourses, read his books and listened to taped discourses. I have had personal contact with Bhagwan through letters, through silent communion with him during satsangs, darshans and his daily drives through the ranch, and have had contact with thousands of other sanjayasins from all over the world both during my visits to Poona and Rajneeshpuram and while living in England. All of these things have contributed to changes in myself: with a fresh approach to life I find I can do things well that I would never have attempted before, and this has drastically affected my career as well as the way that I live my whole life.

EXHIBIT "A-1660"

Having travelled through many different countries and lived in Madras, India, with my family, for eighteen months, I have experienced many different kinds of people, cultures and lifestyles; I also spent some time, while in Madras, studying theosophy and looking into philosophy. Therefore, although I am only nineteen years old, I know that I am a good judge of people, and in my opinion Bhagwan's vast knowledge, experience, wisdom and vision make him the greatest asset that anyone could be to any country. I feel sure that if America (reputedly the country that most encourages freedom, growth and advancement in all fields) really looks at this man and at what he is doing, it will count itself blessed by his presence in the country.

Yours sincerely
