To whom it may concern

My father is a Protestant minister and I was educated in the Christian belief. During my childhood I believed in a personal God and was very religious. In the year 1979 I read by accident my first book of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, which touched me deeply. 1980 I went to Bhagwan in Poona, India, heard his daily lectures and participated in some groups for inner growth. There I read the book "Come and follow me" of Bhagwan about the sayings of Jesus. By reading this book I felt closer to Jesus than ever. I was sure to have met an enlightened Master like Jesus or Buddha and became his disciple. My life changed fundamentally. I became in time more and more aware of and more an adventure and a celebration. Since Bhagwan stopped working with the mind of his disciples and started working direct from heart to heart in silence this process intensified much. I love him more than any other man and I feel his infinite love for all men. He is to me the most important living religious teacher because he denies no religion or principle and because he rendered it possible to me and so many men to make direct existent religious experiences independent from any dogma. I would be happy to have him continue his work in the United States, one of the most free countries of the earth.

Yours faithfully
